

TIPS

- 1. Tempelhofer Feld | Here are the grounds of the former airport where a lot has gone on, and still will, besides aviation | Platz der Luftbrücke
- 2. Tempelhofer Hafen | Recently brought back to life harbor facility with Berlin's first waterside shopping center, across from another building put to diverse use (fashion center, offices, café, disco) – the Ullsteinhaus | Tempelhofer Damm 227
- 3. ufaFabrik | 30-year-old "international culture center" on the grounds of the former UFA-Film processing laboratories – hippie enclave or center of innovation? | Victoriastraße 10-18
- 4. BFC Germania 1888 e.V. | Allegedly Germany's oldest soccer club, today a multicultural organization where parties as well as sports take place | Götzstraße 34
- 5. Straßenbahndepot | Beautiful expressionistic hall from the '20s, today however weakly groaning from its use as a supermarket and parking garage | Friedrich-Wilhelm Straße 17-19
- 6. Ufa-Ateliers | Since 1913, moving images were produced in Tempelhof and ultimately set to music, until the studio moved elsewhere | Oberlandstraße 26-35
- 7. Gartenstadt Neu-Tempelhof | Although WWI put a stop to its construction, this urban site with its English-style landscape planning is compelling even today. A historically conserved area, and after the closing of the airport a most likely even more attractive place to live | Adolf-Scheidt-Platz
- 8. Franckepark mit Wildtiergehege | A lesser known but just as worth seeing historically conserved park, including rose garden and deer | Albrechtstraße / Theodor-Francke-Straße
- 9. Stammhaus Pfennigs Feinkost | Produced since the '70s in Hannover (because of the Berlin Wall), but the brand and potato salad belong to Berlin since 1907 | Ringbahnstraße 22-30

TEMPELHOF

The candy bombers still cast long shadows – at least symbolically – over this district, which does indeed have much more to offer than only the airport. Tempelhof is also home to a harbor for ships, a garden city, erstwhile film studios, and perhaps someday even a mountain.
